

OBITUARY INSTRUCTIONS & EXAMPLE TEXT

While there are no hard and fast rules for writing an obituary, this document serves as a general template for the information and structure that is often used. Feel free to modify your own writing as you see fit. Also, please ask for assistance if you have difficulty or need service, cemetery or charity addresses.

1. INTRODUCTION PT1— Proper name of deceased, age, spouse (if applicable), residence city, “died” (in own words), date of death, and place of death.

You may use nicknames (usually in quotations), but should include the person’s proper name at least once. The prefix “the late” is a short way of saying that the spouse died earlier. Also, many people feel strongly about the word “died”. Please choose the wording you feel to be appropriate.

Joseph L. Smith, 94, husband of the late Mary Perkins Smith of Norwalk, passed away Thursday, January 10, 2009 at the Norwalk Hospital.

2. INTRODUCTION PT2— Date of birth, place of birth, parents names.

Born January 10, 1925, in Omaha, Nebraska, he was the son of the late Robert T. and Martha Jenkins Smith.

3. BIOGRAPHY—Generally, this is a brief paragraph about the person. Some items to include would be notable personal achievements, education, employment, and military history. It is also helpful to include jobs, past residences or affiliations that readers may know the person from. One or two lines are optimum. Do not feel obligated to write a complete biography of the person. Additional information can be saved for eulogies.

Mr. Smith attended Norwalk High School, and then served in the U.S. Army during the Korean War. He later worked for 25 years at Perkin Elmer as a technician. In his spare time he was an active volunteer at St. Mary Church in Norwalk.

4. SURVIVORS—Here you list the surviving family members. Proper names, spouses and town of residence are often included. Street addresses should not be published.

In this section, you may have a large amount of information to include. In a newspaper, grammar is a secondary concern to being clear and concise. Begin with the most immediate relatives. The order of relatives is SPOUSE-CHILDREN-PARENTS-GRANDCHILDREN-GREAT-GRANDCHILDREN, SIBLINGS. Other relatives may be included but usually are not.
